

Crystal Clear Window Works Opens New Training and Distribution Center in Nashville

Nashville, TN. (January 11, 2006). Crystal Clear Window Works USA, the nation's only licensed provider of insulating glass unit (IGU) restoration and defogging services, has opened a new training and distribution center in Nashville, advancing the company's commitment to quality and fulfillment to its dealer network, and bringing new jobs to the Nashville area.

The new facility is an integral part of Crystal Clear's expansion strategy that will serve franchises across the country. It will house the company's Technical Accreditation certification program. The facility features a 20-seat classroom, a state-of-the-art technical training area and administration offices.

"We needed to expand to this facility to sustain an efficient system of service to a growing network of service providers," said Paul Lacey, Chief Development Officer of Crystal Clear Window Works, who manages the Nashville facility. "This new facility supports our dedication to our dealer network, and allows us the opportunity to continue to grow."

The 3,500+ square foot Nashville location, at 475 Craighead Street, was chosen because of its central location, making it convenient and accessible to franchisees, operators, suppliers and employees.

"We are excited about expanding our headquarters in 'Music City USA'," says John Hennessy, CEO and Managing Partner of CCWW USA. "Nashville has recently been recognized as the top corporate relocation and expansion center in the United States, attracting major companies such as Nissan, Louisiana-Pacific and Dell. Its business-friendly environment, central location and talented worker pool made it the perfect home for us."

About Crystal Clear Window Works
